“Get more training for less money”

Sending an employee on a course can cost many hundreds of pounds, a one day course alone can cost £200 plus, not forgetting any travel, accommodation and overtime or abstraction costs that might be incurred. For most organisations it's unlikely that budgets are going to increase in the foreseeable future, as a consequence hard financial choices have to be made. However, this reality doesn't negate the continuing need to train staff. The trick today is to get more training from your budget and have it tailored to meet your specific requirements. We can help you do this by designing a solution around your budget so that in effect you get more for less money.

“Candidates are equipped to undertake crime and intelligence analysis”

We currently offer a complete Initial Intelligence Analysis training package designed specifically for delivery using the Internet. The course introduces the trainee or inexperienced Intelligence Analyst to the National Intelligence Model, the Intelligence Process, Thinking Skills, basic Statistical Analysis and Forecasting, Intelligence Evaluation, Crime Theories, and ANACAPA Charting Techniques and more. On conclusion of the course the candidate is equipped to undertake crime and intelligence analysis. We also offer a two week classroom based equivalent, the choice of delivery method is yours.

“A suite of courses and workshops designed to improve the knowledge and skills of your team”.

“Demonstratively improved their use of statistical techniques to describe and test volume data”

We also run one day workshops designed to address specific training needs. For example, we were asked by a government agency to deliver a customised workshop to a group of their analysts, the aim of which was to develop their use of statistics. After the workshop the candidates demonstratively improved their use of statistical techniques to describe and test volume data.

“A notable improvement in the analysts’ confidence and ability to produce quality intelligence products”.

Similarly we delivered a one day workshop designed to improve the production of Intelligence Products. The workshop included sessions on scoping a problem, negotiating a terms of reference, undertaking analysis and producing an inference. The latter emphasising the importance of describing data and extracting meaning to formulate premise’ and generate hypotheses. A further follow up workshop facilitated the consolidation of candidates learning with a bespoke practical exercise.

The workshops which were designed to be individually self-contained, lifted the attendees thinking, enhanced their ability to extract meaning from data description, and improved their hypotheses and inference construction skills. The relevance of the workshops was demonstrated in the workplace by a notable improvement in the analysts' confidence and ability to produce quality intelligence products.

“Your organisation will more able to keep up with challenges presented by the increasingly sophisticated criminal”

The world is continuously changing as a consequence of economic, social and technological changes. New crimes are conceived, old crimes are presented differently, new laws are enacted and procedures implemented. All of which means that organisations need to provide their employees with training throughout their careers. An organisation that chooses to provide continuous development will find it is more able to keep up with challenges presented by the increasingly sophisticated criminal.

“Provides key knowledge and skills”

Developing employees is an essential activity for all organisations especially in these challenging economic times. It provides employees with the key knowledge and skills that they need to perform their job effectively.

“Keeps employees motivated and demonstrates that they are valued”

Training keeps your employees motivated, new knowledge and skills helping to reduce boredom. It can also rebuild the team spirit as it also demonstrates to the employee that they are valuable enough for the employer to invest in them and in their development. This is particularly true in these difficult economic times, especially so in the public sector where the sword of Damocles has hung for several years.

“Creates positive attitudes”

It can be used to create positive attitudes through clarifying the behaviours and attitudes that are expected from an employee.

“Cost effective saving money”

Training is cost effective as it is cheaper to train existing employees than recruit new ones with the skills you need. It also save's the organisation money as it helps the employee to become more efficient. As managers are expected to do the same or more with less staff, a skilled and motivated employee is more valuable today than ever before.
